A WORD FROM WALT

This is how we know what love is: Jesus Christ laid down his life for us. And we ought to lay down our lives for our brothers. - I John 3:16

Images and stories from Japan this past week have exceeded any imagination—and they'll continue to come for weeks, months, even years. In Canada on Thursday morning, a headline in a local paper captured my attention, 'Fukushima 50' Risk Lives to Prevent Meltdown. The story that followed was even more compelling. Here's how it began:

We do not know their names, their faces, their families or their personal stories. Nobody really does. They are strangers, in a faraway land, doing the unthinkable.

In Japan they have a name: The Fukushima 50. A coterie of nuclear plant employees—some reports indicate 50, others suggest four working rotations of 50—who stayed behind while 700 of their co-workers were evacuated from the stricken Fukushima-Daiichi facility on the Japanese coast.

Five have been killed. Two are missing. Twenty-one have been injured in a struggle where, in the words of Japan's Prime Minister Naoto Kan, "retreat is unthinkable."

The men understand the stakes. They know there is no turning back. One worker told a departing colleague he was prepared to die—that it was his job. Another informed his wife he wouldn't be coming home anytime soon.

And so they battle on, a weary bunch of managers, operators, technicians, soldiers and firemen, amid rumours, worst-case scenarios and startling television footage.

They are mid- and low-level employees. They are men with no names, cast into extraordinary circumstances, battling fires, explosions, the threat of explosion and the invisible menace: dangerously high levels of radiation no protective suit can deflect, and one that threatens to seep into the atmosphere if they fail.

A gripping story and a challenging example! Unknown and unnamed individuals, who are literally risking, if not giving, their lives – perhaps even as you are reading this article – in order to save the physical lives of people they'll likely never know or even meet – this side of eternity.

In a similar way, Jesus' example and His words compel us to risk and even give our lives in order to save the eternal souls of people with whom we'll be able to spend eternity!

If anyone would come after me, he must deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. – Matthew 16:24
